Why Use Employee Scheduling Software?

Working as a manager can be rewarding yet time consuming. Whether you are a small business owner or a mid-level corporate manager, there is always something that needs to be accomplished. From filling out paperwork to interacting with customers, managing stock and other busy work, you may constantly have your hands full. Employee scheduling software helps save you time and frustration when you create shifts for your employees and frees up your time for tackling higher-priority tasks.

Staff scheduling software is a one-stop solution for managing all of your employees' schedules and personal information, and generating business reports, notifications and more. This software helps managers save time by quickly creating regular schedules and schedule templates, and by assigning shifts all at once. You can copy a schedule week after week and make adjustments for holidays and if your business hours change. Employees can submit time-off requests electronically, and managers can avoid mistakes and omissions by approving time-off requests, shift swaps and requested hours directly in the scheduling software.

In this site, you will find several articles on employee scheduling software. Also, take a look at the best scheduler software we tested: ShiftPlanning, TimeForge Scheduling and NimbleSchedule.

Employee Scheduling Software: What to Look For

The best employee scheduler software saves you time, keeps your employees happy and makes shift information readily available. To be efficient, staff management software needs to simplify the process of entering employee information and shift requirements. It also needs to simplify your ability to give each employee sufficient hours, schedule employees to work only when they are available and ensure that employees with the proper qualifications cover each shift.

Good office scheduling software can make your job as a manager easier in other ways as well. First, if your employees know when they are expected to work far ahead of time, you can reduce tardiness and absenteeism. It can also save you from "When do I work?" phone calls. Ultimately, you want an application that is easy to use but full of advanced features to meet the specific needs of your unique business.

Below are the criteria we used to evaluate employee scheduling software.

Scheduling Capabilities

If you're paying for sophisticated scheduling software, you need it to do more than function as a basic schedule spreadsheet. Scheduling applications should be a storehouse of information that you can use in a variety of ways. You need options that let you define employee positions, skill levels and required hours. You also need features that let you assign departments and on-call status to employees, let employees sign up for open shifts and alert you to scheduling conflicts in time for you to resolve them.

In addition, you want an application that makes your schedules accessible to your employees. The best work scheduling software not only lets you print schedules to post in the workplace, but it also exports data and posts shift information that your employees can access online. The best work schedule makers also send notifications to employees to alert them of shift changes and to remind them of shifts far enough in advance to ensure that they're able to arrive on time.

Reporting

The most important function of scheduling software is, of course, helping you assign shifts that meet your needs and your employees' needs. Another great benefit to this software is its ability to combine data into easy-to-understand reports. We looked for applications that show you the total employee hours in a single click, which is valuable if you want to avoid overtime hours for any of your employees. We also checked for daily, weekly and monthly reporting options. The most advanced applications show time-off summaries and total shift costs as well.

Ease of Use

This software is all about increasing efficiency. Therefore, employee scheduling software should be easy to download and intuitive to use. Top scheduling software is accessible to seasoned tech users and novices alike.

Help & Support

Even with the most intuitive employee scheduling software, having access to technical support is a must. Some of the applications we tested come with 24/7 assistance, whereas others offer the bare minimum. The most impressive software provides help resources through avenues such as telephone and email  customer service, online FAQs and user forums.

Employee scheduling software's multi-functionality will save you time so that you can devote more of your energy to doing what your business is all about, whether that's mixing the perfect cappuccino, beautifying residential landscapes or cleaning teeth to prevent cavities.
